Professional Side: Build Status

Checked against the code on 14 October 2026, and compared with the client side. Prepared by the developer.

Headline. The professional side is further along than previously reported. All twenty of its controllers read real records, not sample data. What is missing is not a long list of unbuilt screens. It is one structural gap, two small defects, and four items that are waiting on a decision or an outside service rather than on development time.

professional controllers, all model backed	professional screen areas built	structural gap that matters

1. The one thing that matters most

A professional cannot open an agreement at all. Every agreement route on the platform begins with `client/finalize/...`. There is no professional route to view an agreement, approve a version, or sign one.

Today the professional's counter signature is written automatically at the moment the client signs, and the code says plainly that this is a pre launch stand in so the flow can be completed in demos. It is labelled as such and was a deliberate choice, not an oversight.

Why it matters now. The Edit Agreement feature just built sends changes "for review". There is currently nobody on the other side to review them. This is the single largest piece of professional side work remaining, and it is the one that unlocks the agreement rules already written.

2. What is complete on the professional side

Each of these reads live records. The note says what drives it.

Dashboard	Complete	Earnings, bookings, reviews, subscription, opportunity feed
Bidding Board	Complete	Events and bids, the largest controller on the side

Notifications	Complete	Notification records

> Correction to an earlier report. An earlier message said about eleven professional screens ran on hardcoded data, and an estimate of three to five weeks rested on that. That was wrong. Those arrays were drawing coordinates for charts, not invented records. Every one of the twenty controllers reads the database. The estimate that followed from it should be set aside.

3. What remains on the professional side

ITEM	KIND	NOTE
Agreement surface for the professional	Build	View, approve, sign, and respond to edits. The structural gap above.
Response time trend	Defect	The Messages page prints a fixed "down 12 percent" under a real figure. Nothing measures it.
Lead budget range	Defect	One line on the Leads page is written so the page prints code instead of the budget.
Map and weather on the dashboard	Outside service	Needs a maps and a weather provider. Not a development question.
Intro or highlight video on packages	Decision	Deliberately left out. Needs upload limits, storage and a retention policy agreed first.
Dispute and mediation on reviews	Decision	The mockup offers Edit, Hide and Peer Mediate. None exist, so none were shown.
Payouts to professionals	Decision	The platform pays nobody automatically today. The only payout is a manual request an administrator marks as paid.
Verification badge wording	In progress	The approved verification corrections touch one professional profile screen as well.

5. Where the two sides are out of step

The client side has moved a long way recently. These are the places where the professional side has not yet caught up, in the order they affect a real booking.

- The agreement. A client can now set terms, approve a version, sign, edit the agreement and keep a full version history. A professional can do none of these.
- Agreement edits. Changes are sent "for review" to a side that cannot review them.
- Hired Talent and Availability. The client can see who they hired and check availability. The professional has no matching view of who hired them beyond the bookings list.
- Influencers. The client side now has influencer entries in several places. A client still cannot reach an influencer, because that side is not open.

6. What is extra, and should stay that way

- Team and Staffing is a professional's own crew and shifts. It is not the retired combined force feature and should not be confused with it.
- Contracts hub is a bookings pipeline, not the agreement. The two names are close enough to cause confusion later.
- Food truck and multipurpose stands were never started, so there is nothing to remove. The ordinary food truck booking, where a client hires and pays, continues to work.

> Suggested order. First the two small defects, because they are visible and cheap. Then the professional agreement surface, because it is what stops an agreement from ever completing honestly. The four decision items can be answered at any time and do not block the rest.

Figures counted from the code on 14 October 2026. Anything that could not be confirmed in the code was left out rather than estimated.
